

State and Local FRD Laws

Prohibiting Employment Discrimination against Parents and Other Caregivers

Some states, counties and municipalities have family responsibilities discrimination (FRD) laws that prohibit employers from discriminating against employees because they provide care to family members. These laws may make it illegal, for example, for employers to select employees for termination because they care for their children or other family members. Employees who work in a location that is not covered by one of these FRD laws may still be protected from discrimination by federal laws that cover family leave, sex discrimination, and disability discrimination. More information is available in the report that accompanies this table, Protecting Parents During Covid-19: State and Local FRD Laws Prohibit Discrimination at Work. Notes about the FRD laws

Important note about currency and reliability of data: This database represents the most comprehensive listing of state and local FRD laws that exists. To maintain it, WorkLife Law researchers methodically search dozens of legislative databases in U.S. state and local jurisdictions annually. The last search was conducted in November 2020. WorkLife Law learned of several local laws enacted after that search was conducted and added them to the database in October 2021. It is possible that some local laws have not been identified or were enacted since the last search. We recommend conducting targeted local searches to supplement this data.

Explanation of information presented in the database of state and local laws:

¹ The summaries of the laws are very brief and focused on only prohibitions that involve employment actions by an employer. The full laws often also include actions by labor unions and employment agencies, and may also prohibit retaliation, aiding and abetting, advertising activities, and refusal to admit to a training program. The full laws may also detail specific discriminatory activities that employers may not engage in (such as failure to hire and termination).

² The phrase “Parents of children” to describe the caregivers covered is shorthand for what is often a much longer definition that typically includes parenthood by birth, adoption and guardianship, residing with a minor with the permission of the minor’s parents, being pregnant, and being in the process of adopting or securing guardianship.

³ The number after the word “private” in the employer coverage column indicates the minimum number of employees an employer must have to be covered by the law. Note that most laws’ definitions of “employer” contain exclusions that are not included in this summary description of employer coverage (for example, many laws exclude certain social clubs and religious organizations). Some laws define “employer” to include agents of the employer (such as supervisors), which is not included in this summary description.

⁴ “Yes” means that an employee can file a lawsuit in court for violation of the law. “Yes/Exh” means an employee can file a lawsuit in court for violation of the law only after exhausting administrative remedies by filing a complaint with the appropriate state or local agency that administers the law. “No” means that an employee may not file a lawsuit in court for violation of the law (or the law is silent on the topic). In such circumstances, the employee may be able to file a complaint with the appropriate state or local agency, or the agency may be solely entitled to enforce the law.
